Board Members Set Pace

The seven members of the Lane Community College Board of Education can never receive sufficient compensation for the hours and hours they have devoted to their task of the formulation of policies to guide the College.

This year the Board was faced with many challenges. New campus construction--its progress and its problems--was a constant agenda item. The advisability of participation in inter-collegiate athletics was presented to the Board by the students for their sanction.

One of the most far-reaching accomplishments during this term of service by the Board was the approval by the voters of the $1.5 million tax base. This vote of confidence by the community provides the College with a sound financial base for its continued operation.

It has been the leadership of the members of the LCC Board of Education that has inspired the standard of excellence Lane has achieved in its three year existence. The belief of the Board in the community college movement and the "open door" philosophy has influenced Lane's talented and progressive administrators and staff in their commitment to pursue and maintain this standard.

In addition to the seven-member elected Board of Education, there are nearly 250 citizens from throughout the College district who serve as volunteer members of 21 advisory committees appointed by the Board. The committee members evaluate proposed instructional programs and keep the College informed of community needs for courses and programs.

THE JOB WELL DONE

His monument--those men made more aware
That life may be a fine-precision thing,
That right-positioned cutting edges sing
In rhythmic pattern; that when people care
How well a job is done, they also share
The joy of doing. These the views that bring Commitment to a goal--continuing
With steady patience and with zeal to spare.

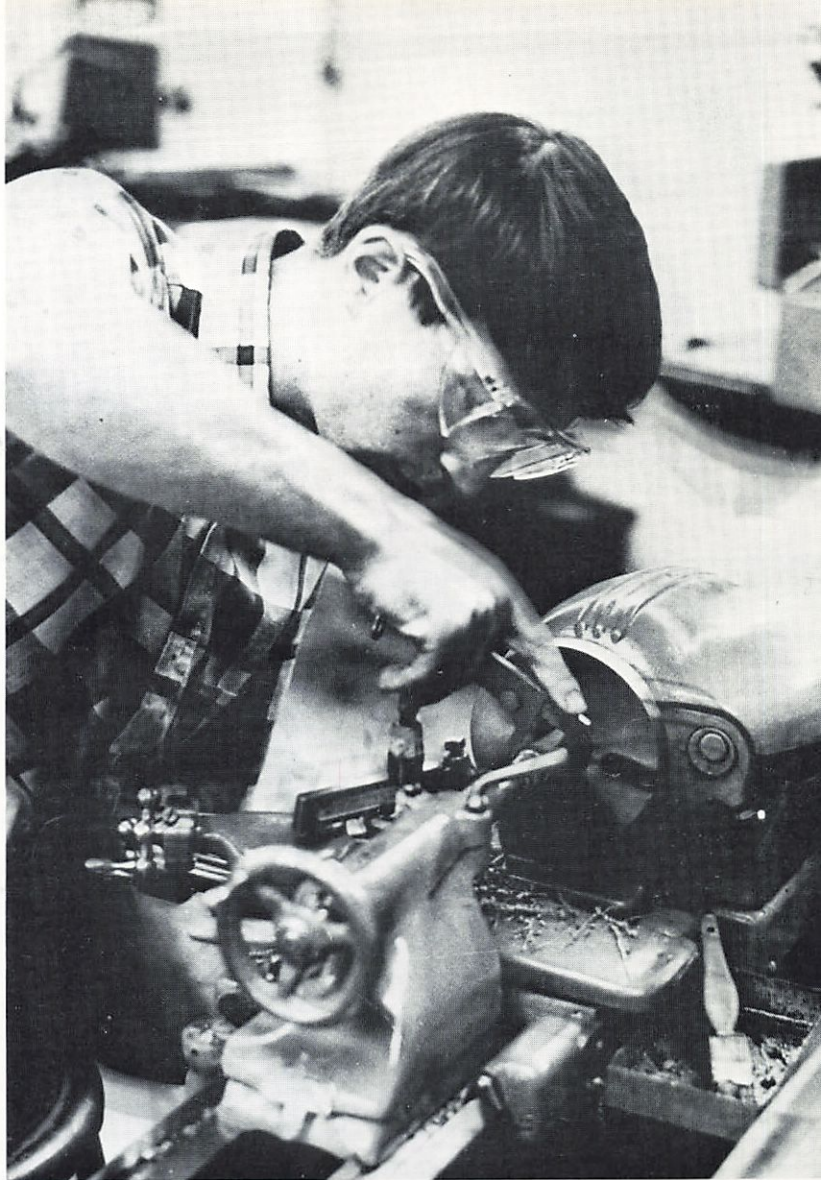

His monument as well--the men who learned
Contempt for mediocrity; for when Perfection could be ground, perfection turned.
He could demand, accepting nothing less;
Thus furnishing to learning fellow men
The gauge designed for measuring success.

Looking Toward The Future

Facing The Challenge of The Future

Ready to Meet The Challenges of Tomorrow

The starry-eyed look found in the eyes of students on LCC's more than 40 campuses could be attributed to the anticipation of entering a new campus.

The common expression accompanying the gaze, "wait until we are on the new campus and then we will be better organized" came from both students and administrators.

For students it posed the solution to problems faced in the process of gaining an education.

For administrators, the new unified campus will solve communication gaps inherent in a multi-campus school.

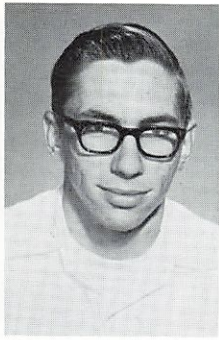

For all associated with the College the unification of the physical plant symbolizes the advent of a more solidified student body and the strengthening of school spirit and pride for both students and faculty.

The attitude of many students of "why am I the one who has to be at a converted grade school" will soon be a thing of the past. Instead of dashing from campus to campus, the school will be consolidated, but the problems of students and staff may linger in various shapes and forms for eternity.

CONCRETE, CEMENT, PIPES, wooden forms, steel cables, roaring machinery, and the sweat and energy of hundreds of men change the rolling green countryside off 30th Avenue to the magnificent natural wood and brick structures of our beautiful new campus.

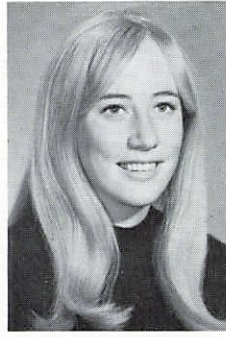

Campus construction continued through adverse weather, contract negotiations, labor disputes, funding applications, bid openings, and the constant stream of curious spectators and intensely interested visitors. "Don't forget your hard hat" was the password for the duration of the building period. Time schedules and dates were eyed anxiously as the LCC community anticipated finally being on one campus.

WORK CAN BE FUN! Student Senate members Gary McNabb, GiGi Gamble, and Judy Ray leave for a week-end at Yachats, Oregon, where they participated in a student-staff retreat prior to the start of fall term. Planning sessions provided the opportunity for students and staff to express their opinions concerning student government as well as the opportunity to become better acquainted with each other. It wasn't ALL work, though, as some of the swimmers, hikers, joggers, card players, and gab-festers will be quick to tell you. There might be those, too, who would relate that the most harrowing sport of all just might have been the trips coming and going.

Lindsay Helps Senate Set State, National Firsts

Activity was the word to describe the 1967-68 Student Senate. Taking part in nation and statewide firsts, the growing student body was led by president Leon Lindsay and officers Larry Barker, GiGi Gamble, Judy Ray, Barbara Bronson and Bob Adams.

Growing pain within the Senate resulted in a revised constitution. Senate members faced the ever-present problem of uniting students from the scattered campuses.

The Senate sponsored various social activities during the year and much of the internal unity was created by a retreat held in Yachats. This retreat was attended by Senate officers and faculty heads with whom they would be working during the ensuing year. Not only did this enable the Senate and administration to become better acquainted, it enabled them to get a head start on the year's business and plans as well as to begin the breakdown of the communication gaps.

One of the year's major actions was the continued effort on the part of the students that emerged into the Intercollegiate Sports activity program, though on a limited basis for next year. After getting final Board approval, the students will assume the major burden of finances.

Not only did Oregon's fastest growing community college send large delegations to the Oregon Community College Student Association and Oregon Community College Association conventions, it also was the first community college in the nation to send a student, Senate president Leon Lindsay to the National Community College Association in Boston.

In student body elections spring term, Marsh Johnson defeated four other nominees in the race for the presidency. Others obtaining offices were Roger Shackelford, Bill Armstrong, Jenny Bright, Joyce Early, and Pat Lloyd.

SENATORS AND OFFICERS met in the Snack Shack every other Thursday afternoon to conduct business.

Not only has Marsh Johnson begun planning for the new Student Senate next year, he has the added advantage of a unified student body on the consolidated campus and a group of experienced officers to back him.

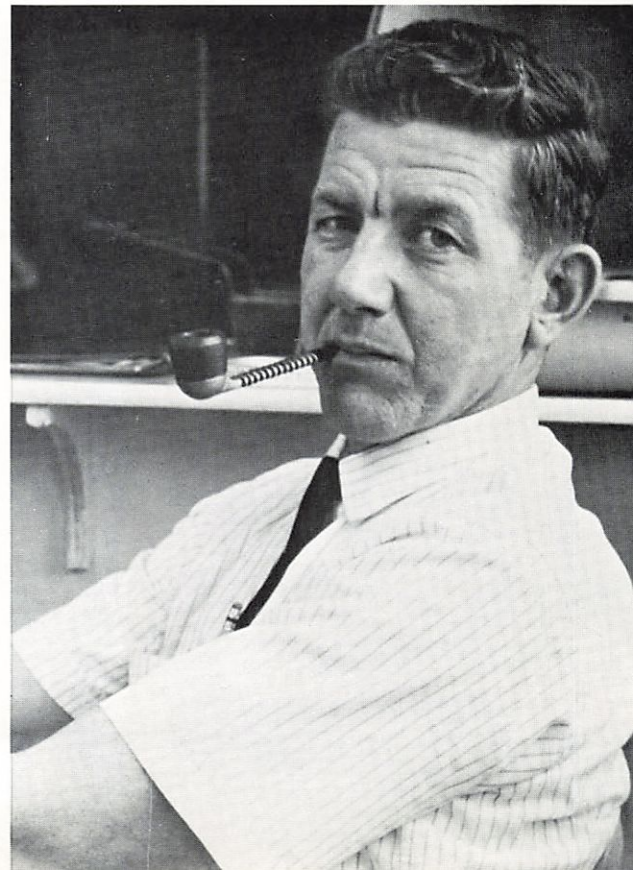

He attended the National Junior College Student Body President Conference in Grand Junction, Colo., along with Gary McNabb and Roger Shackelford, meeting with community college student leaders from all over the country.

The Senate took an active part in the state Bond Issue #3 measure and in supporting the LCC tax base.

Leon Lindsay and this year's Senate officers, as those who preceded them, have left a difficult record to follow. Their achievements were accomplished only by hard work and determination. If Spring Term was any indication of the effort to be put forth by Marsh Johnson's slate of officers, another good year for LCC lies ahead.

McNabb Heads

The old adage that children or, in this case, students should be seen and not heard, would certainly not be fitting for Gary McNabb.

Elected in the spring of 1967 to head the Oregon State Community College Student Association (later the OCCSA), Gary made good his promise of a "helluva lot of activity" for the association. He brought each of the 11 community colleges scattered throughout the state closer together by starting a statewide college newsletter and by sponsoring a variety of tournaments.

By spearheading the student-faculty committees for the colleges, he helped to overcome the problem of credibility gaps present between students and administration as well as allowing the students to take an active part in the policies that would govern them in the future. He reversed the adage to say that students should be heard and that their ideas, in many cases, are better than any of those the administrators and faculty were able to come up with to solve problems.

Not only was Gary able to pass his enthusiasm on to fellow members of the association in Oregon, he took part in many national conventions and passed on his ideas there as well as gathering new ones.

His year in office saw attendance at the state conventions rise from 50 to more than 150 participants. Some of the major accomplishments included the revision of the constitution and renewed vigor in working with the other three facets of the Oregon Community College Association.

Yes, Gary McNabb fulfilled this activity promise. He has brought a seen and little heard group of students into one that is both seen and heard and what is being heard is well-worth listening to by college administrators, faculty and board. It is the sound of growth and progress.

GARY MCNABB AND OCCSA Secretary Patti Baumann discuss the coming year with administrative secretary Marje Blood.

Intramural Sports Draws

350 Participants

Paves
Way
for Intercollegiate Competition

An estimated 350 people took part in the intramural sports program at LCC this year. The programs seemed to function smoothly due to good planning and a large number of participants.

Those taking part in the Fall Term program either ran the cross country course or took part in the eight-team football league. North Eugene came out on top of the flag football competition in a season which saw very few games canceled due to lack of team quota.

Winter Term sports centered around a full basketball program composed of eight teams and tied with football for the most popular sport. Also offered Winter Term were weight lifting matches and wrestling.

Softball highlighted the Spring Term roster with golf, tennis, badminton and weight lifting completing it.

The Board of Education again this year found themselves facing the question of an intercollegiate sports program. Backed by the sports participants, Intramural Council and Student Senate, the board fi-ally accepted a petition for an intercollegiate sports program on a limited basis. The students plan to assume more than half the financing for the program to begin next year when the college moves to its new campus. Scheduled for play include basketball, baseball, cross country and track as well as a possible soccer team. LCC will compete with other community colleges and smaller four-year colleges.

Chairman of the intramural program this year was Mike Pendleton, who found himself working closely with Cecil Hodges, Health and Physical Education division chairman and Mel Krause. He helped the council to enjoy its successful year in sports.

The Dawn of a New Campus.

Of New Learning Experiences...

Of a New Tomorrow...

Ironically, the value of those things we hold most dear varies from being free to being very expensive.

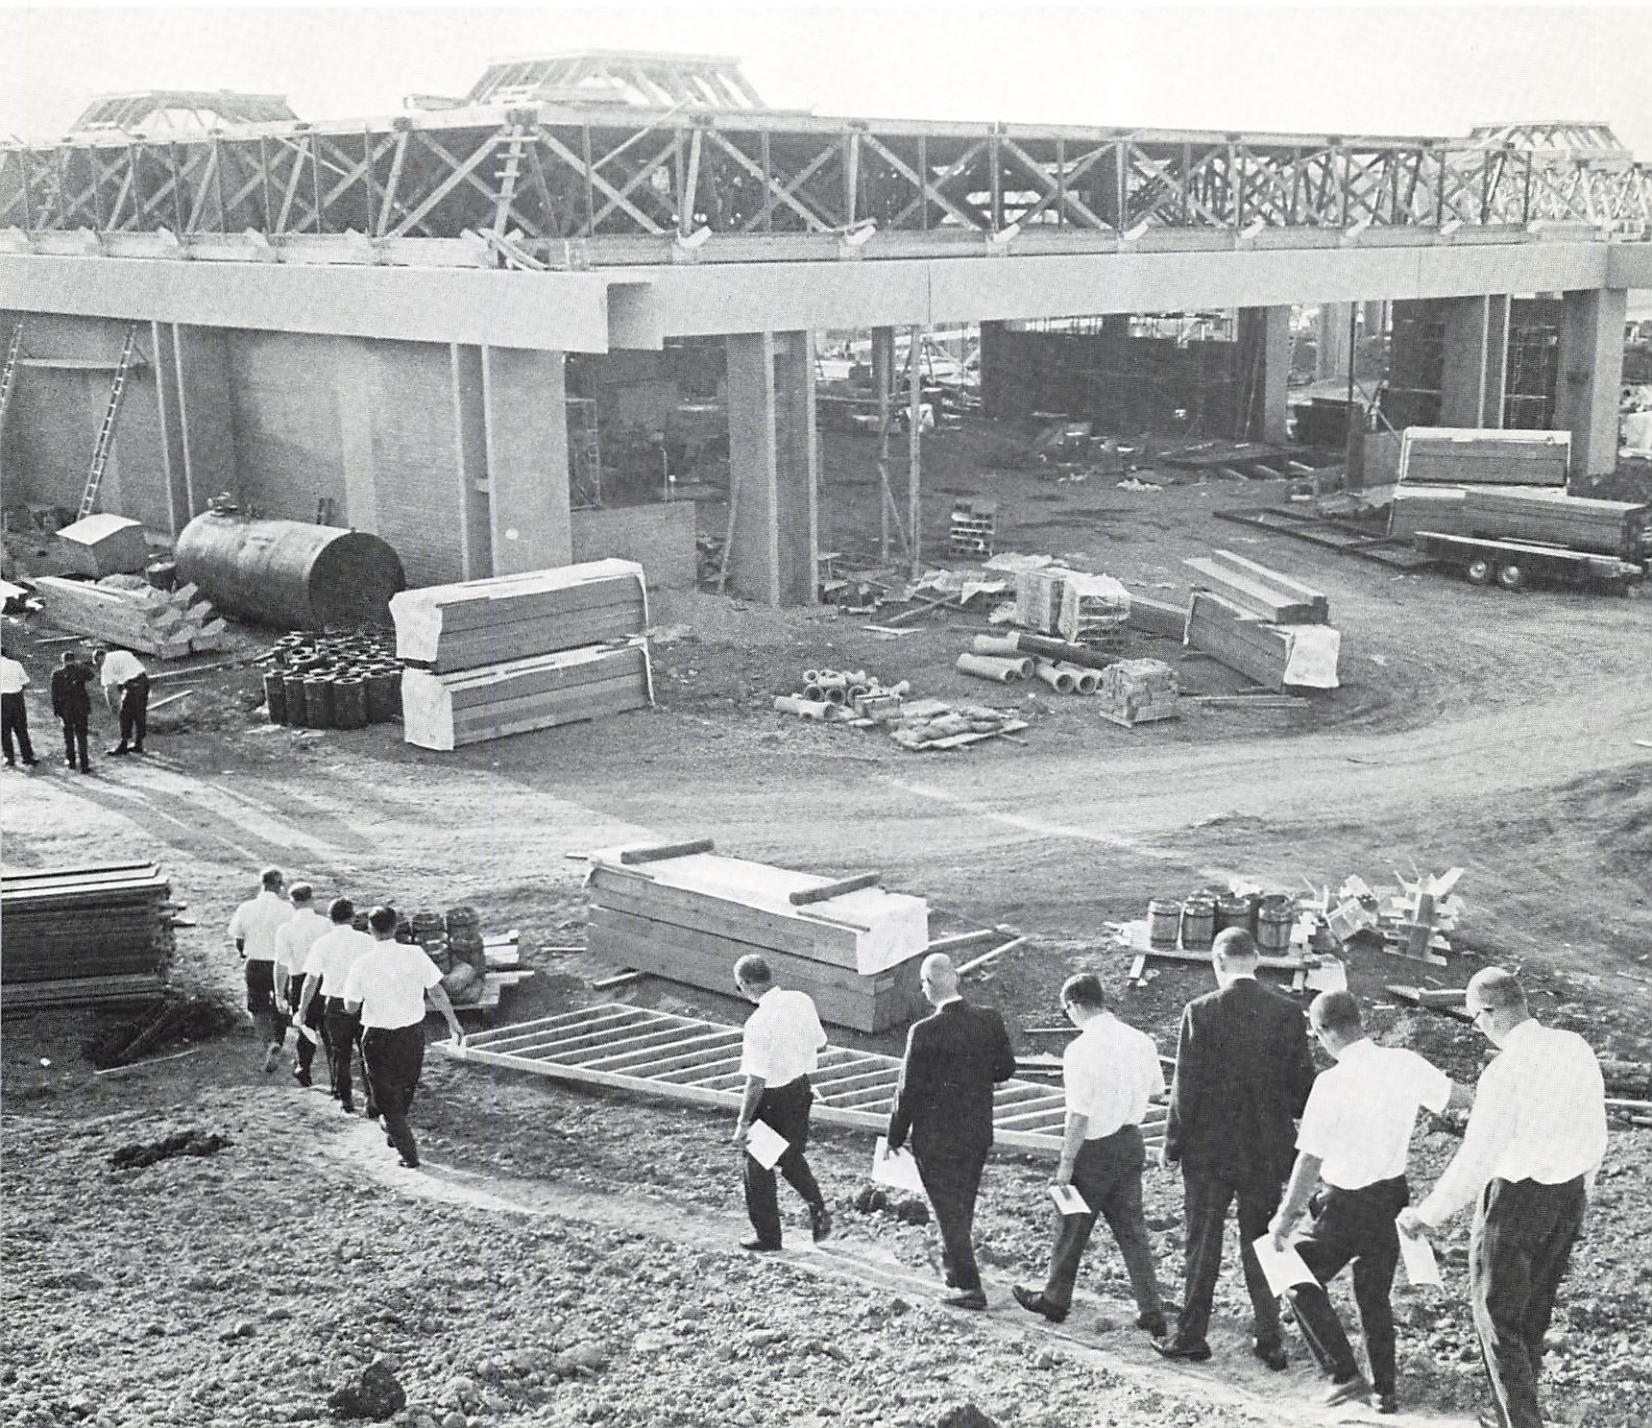

Education is costly.

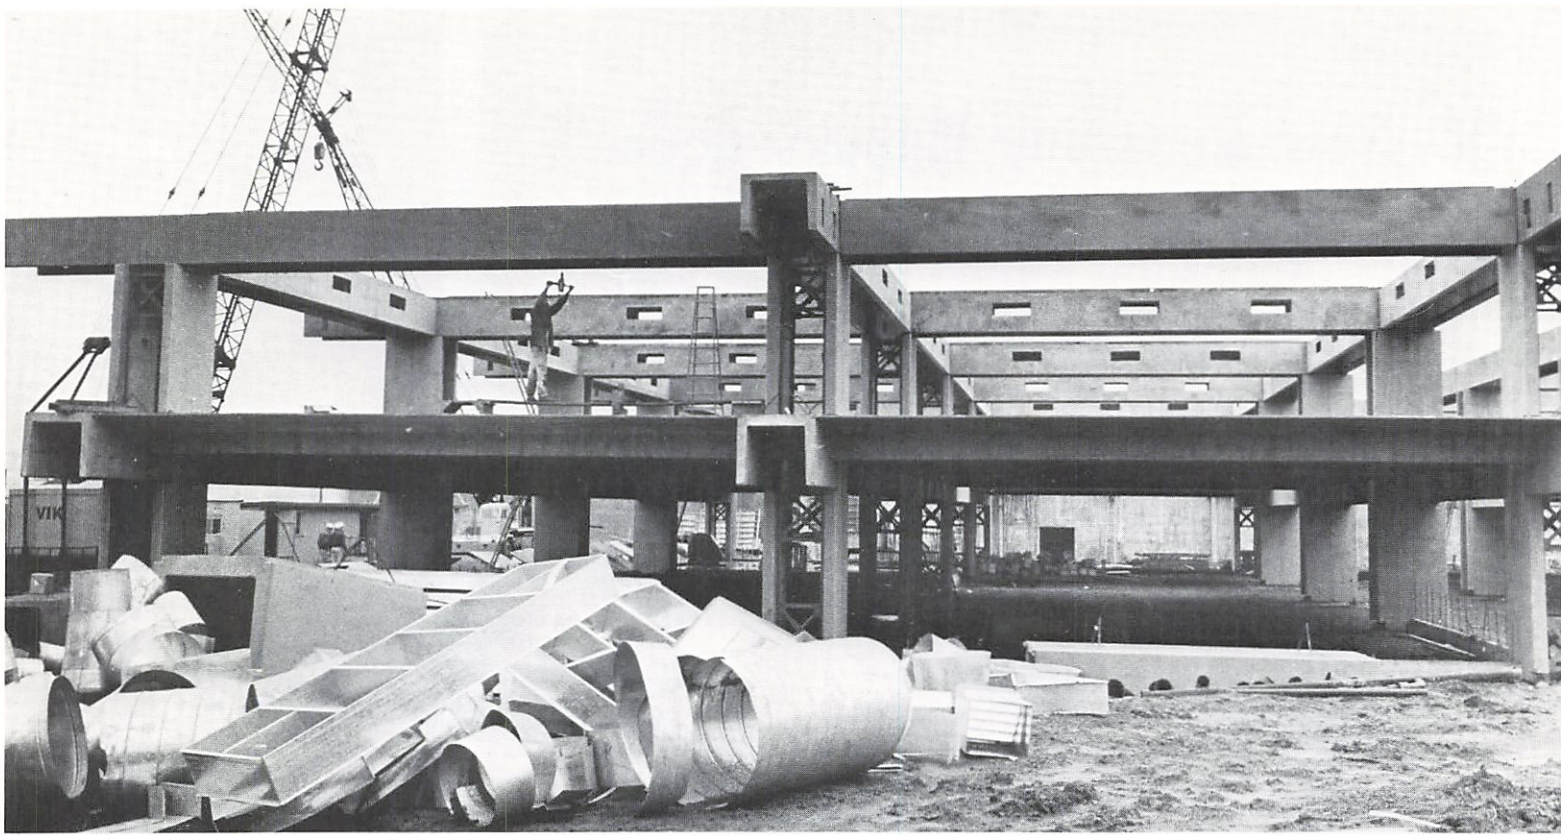

The widow of the crushed construction man has paid dearly in the interest of higher education.

Lane County voters approved LCC's tax providing a more stable financial picture for the College.

New Campus construction need not stop because of a lack of funds. State-wide the voters passed ballot measure #3 to more adequately finance long term building construction in Oregon through the sale of bonds.

The plumbers' union struck and finally settled just short of a point where the entire project would have had to shut down. But construction continued.

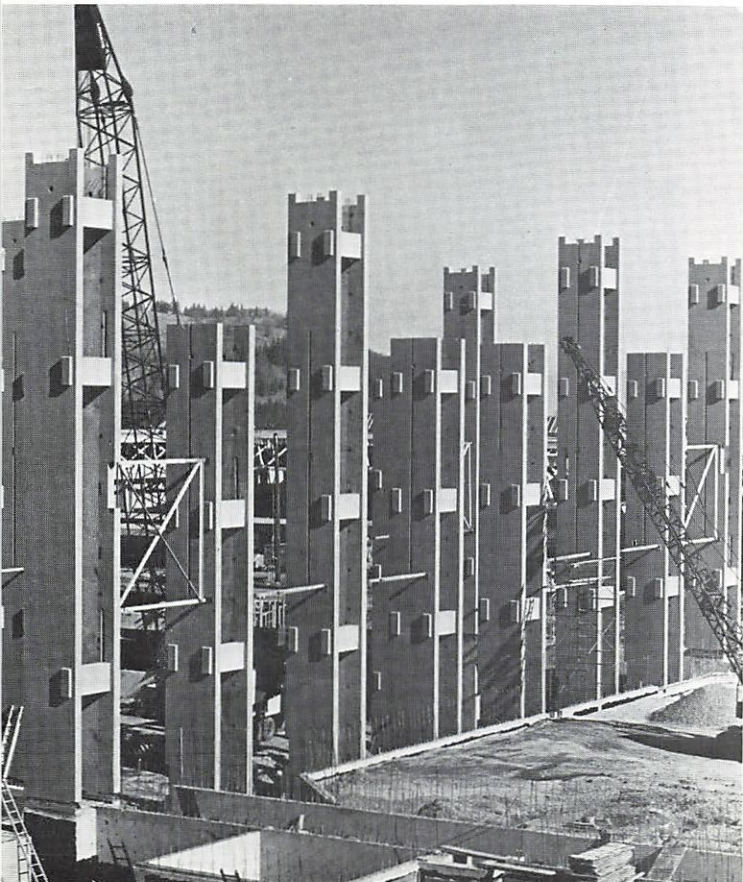

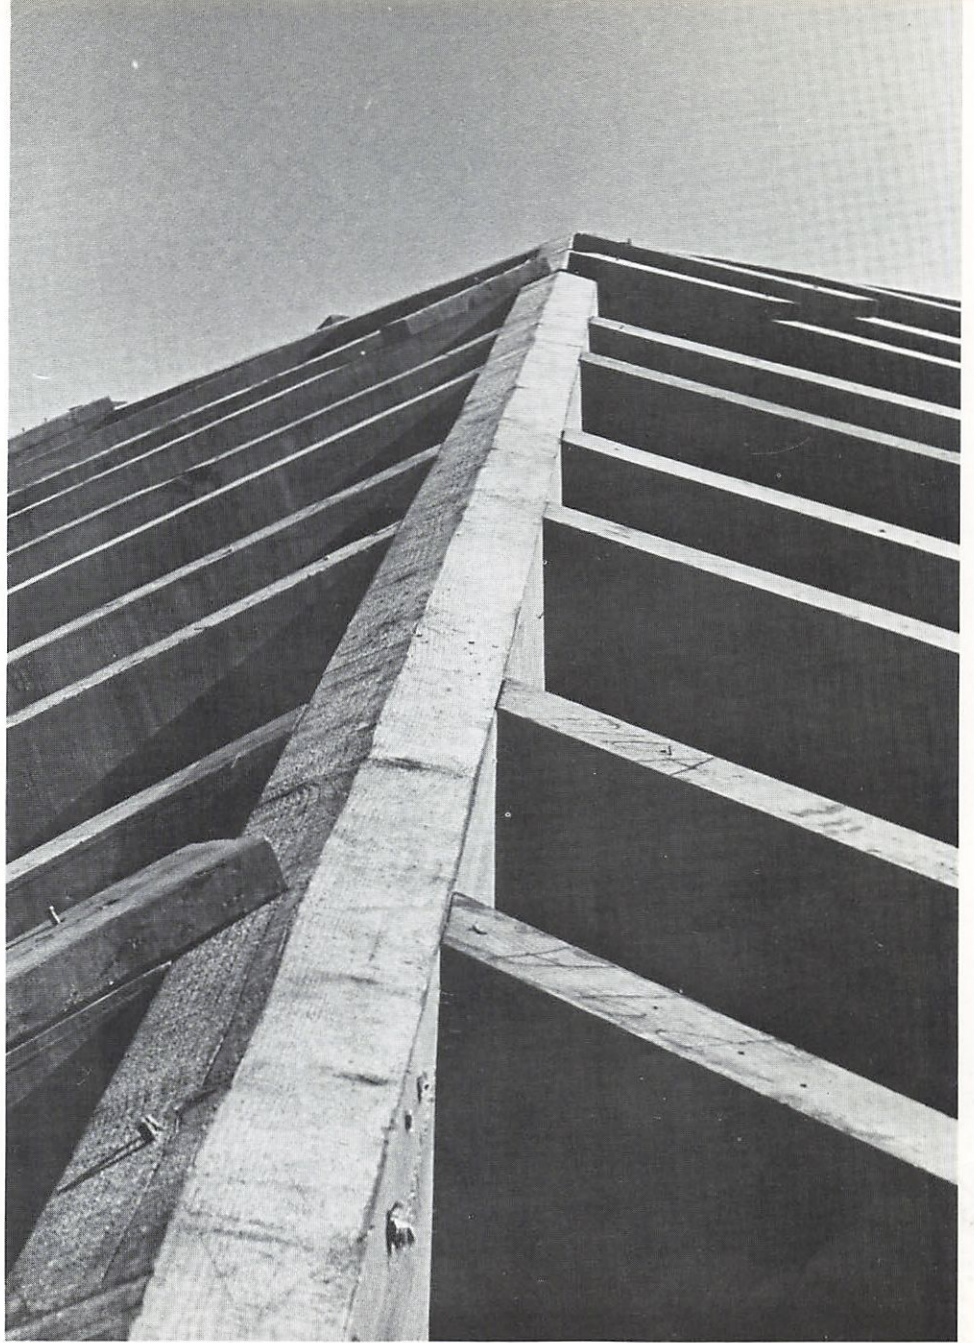

Where trees once dotted a peaceful meadow, and where animals romped and lived contentedly, men worked--frantically worked.

And cold grey columns of concrete were erected. Huge cranes lifted massive pre-stressed concrete slabs into place on the columns, where the wind once whispered through the tops of trees.

Large, ugly gouges appeared in the earth. Pipes and electrical conduits were laid to rest in the network of connecting ditches that were later covered by the frantic men.

Winter came with its rain. The meadow-land-lost became a quagmire of sticky, oozy mud; but the men worked on.

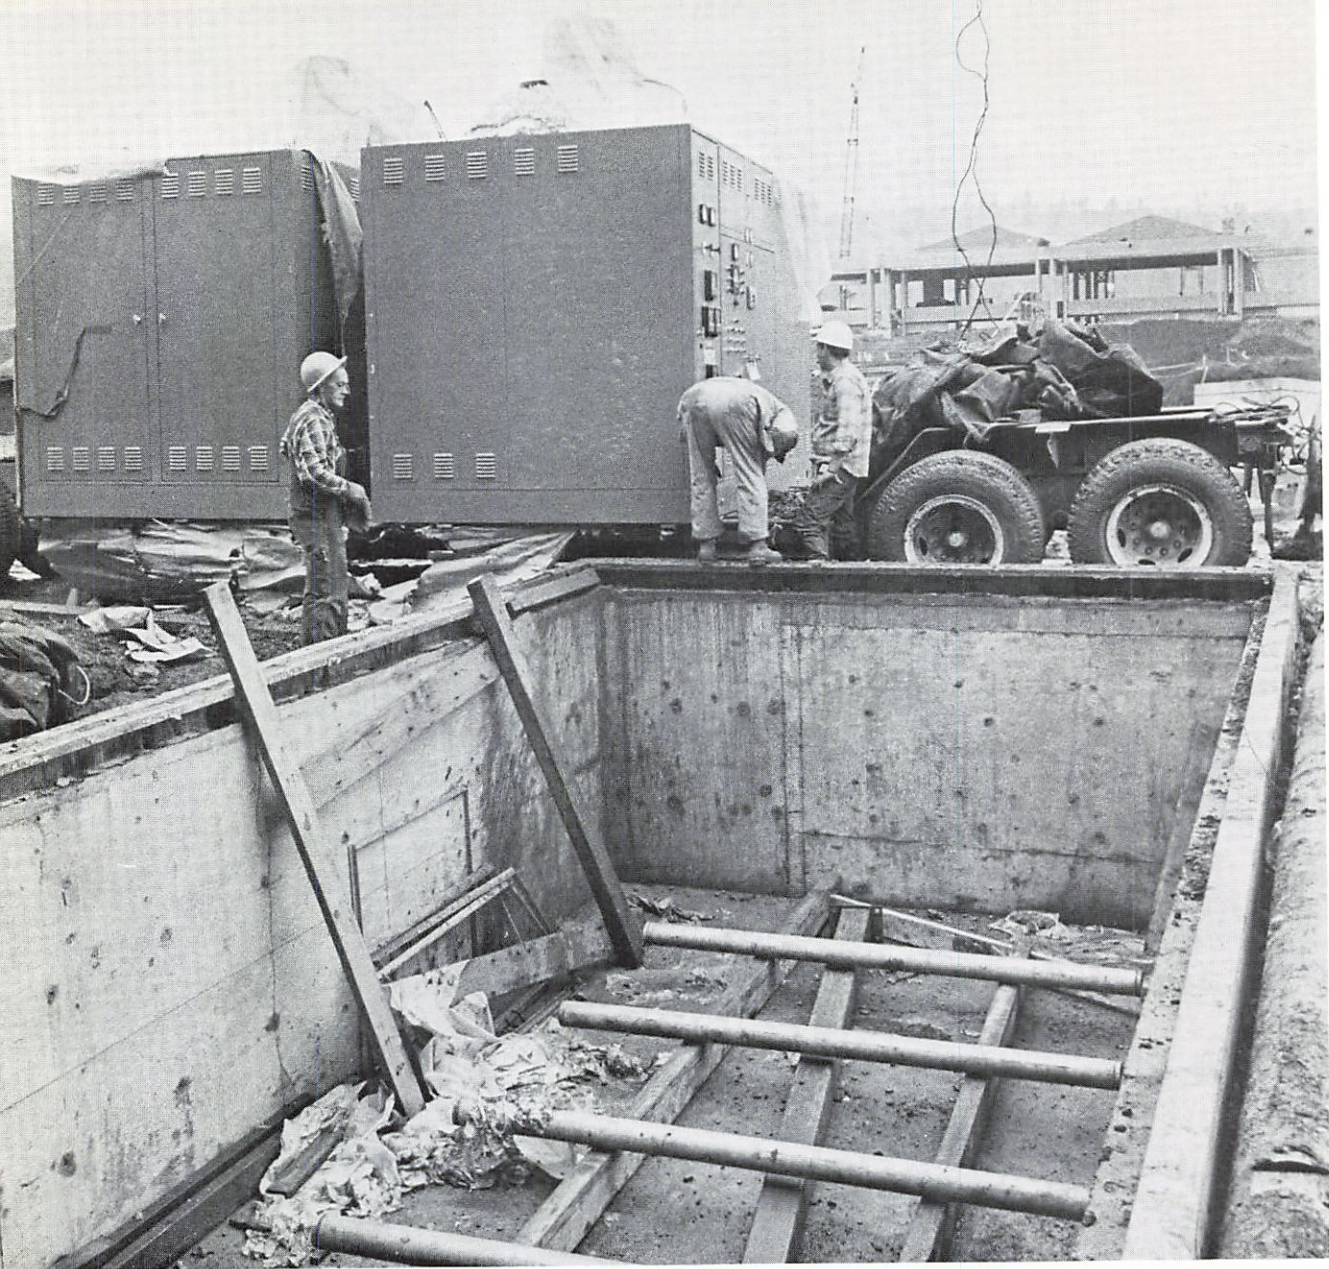

Heaps of discarded wood and metal were piled higher as the campus grew.

A college campus, the harvest of man's hard work began to take form.

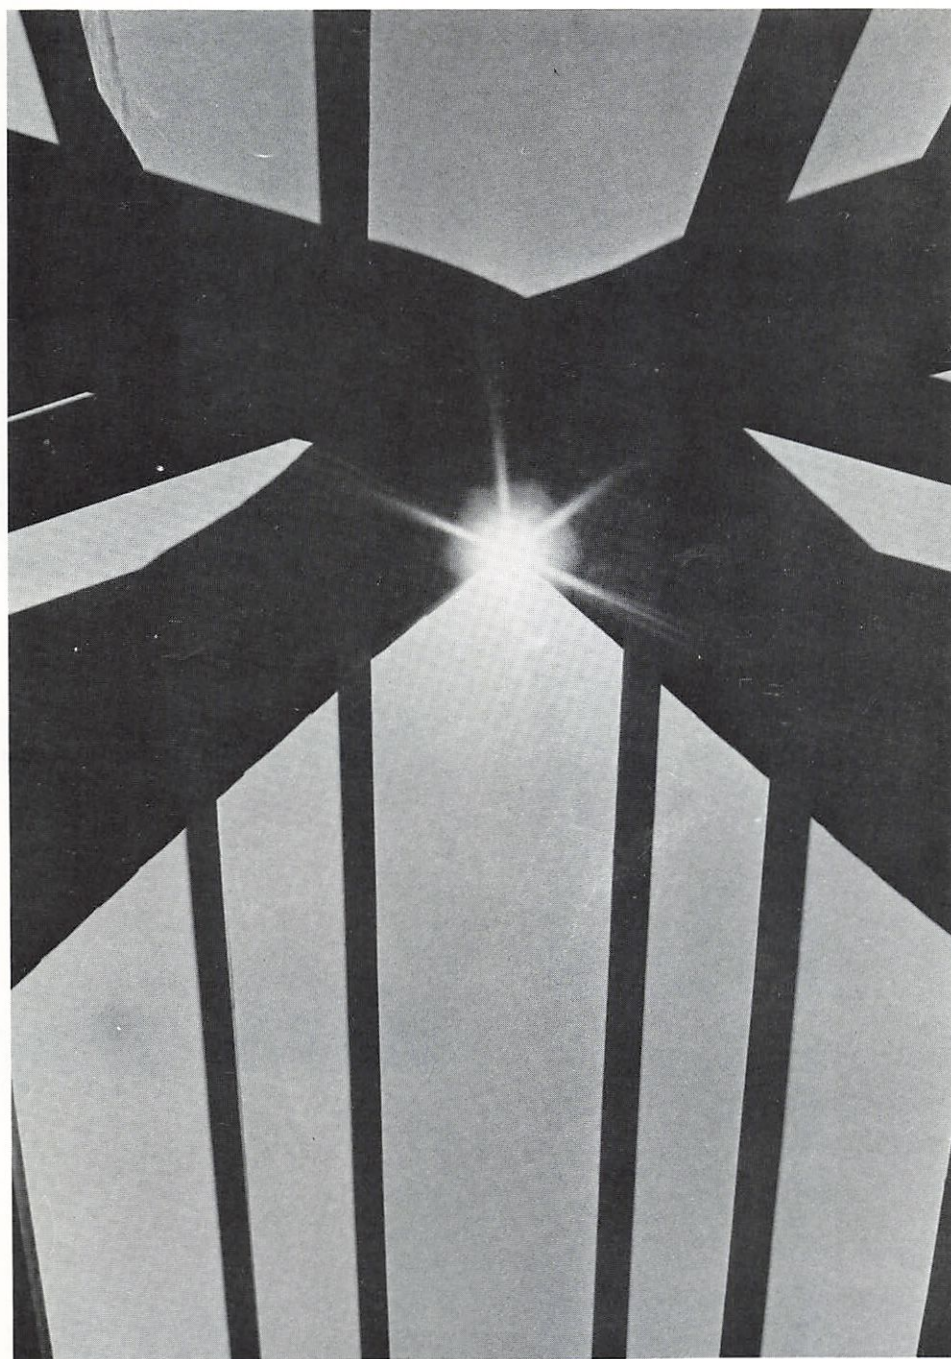

A college is beneficial to man, to his mind and body, and to his economy and society.

The loss of that grassy slope to the structures which are representative of man's constant search for knowledge is costing more than anyone realizes.

But man's creation continued to grow.

And he called it progress.

The Year In Review...

The year passes much like the chapters of a book and one's acquaintances form the characters of it. The setting is the familiar Bethel, Eugene and Springfield campuses. The book is both comedy and tragedy, both mystery and adventure. It is filled with every aspect of the lives of its characters.

This year's Titan staff has tried to preserve some of these actions from the student level as well as from the faculty and administrative levels. We have tried to capture the excitement of intramural sports, parades and the building of a new campus; the feelings of sacrifice of time and energy on the part of the Board members and publications staffs; the adventure of students taking part in politics, as well as all the other feelings reflected in the faces of people involved with a growing school.

We have strived to express this feeling of growth and movement in many ways; by having a hard-bound cover, increasing the number of pages, and by the very lay-out of the pages.

If this book would be dedicated to any one person, it would be to Dr. Dale Parnell, new Superintendent of Public Instruction, for it is he that has instigated so many unique policies and opportunities that have made LCC what it is.

I only hope that the school can live up to his expectations, that of not just being in the top 10% in the nation, but of gaining that first place spot. It will take determination and hard work to achieve, but if past actions are any indication of the type of people LCC has, the first place rating will not be long in coming.--Debbie Jo Briggs
