LCC instructor works with Boeing's Motion Picture and TV Division

Mass Communications instructor Mike Hopkinson disappeared last term.

He took a leave to research employment requirements at several Washington state corporations.

Hopkinson spent six weeks working at the Boeing Co. in its Seattle Motion Picture and Television (MPTV) division.

"I knew absolutely nothing about the corporate environment," says Hopkinson, who coordinates Supervised Field Experience for students in the Mass Comm. Department.

"The biggest thing in getting employed is experience," Hopkinson continues, stating that he would like the Mass Comm. Department to "tailor experience to large corporations and not just commercial and educational."

Boeing employs 65,800 people in the state of Washington alone and as a result good communications are important for smooth and efficient operations within the corporation. The MPTV division produces films and videotapes for other divisions to keep them abreast of news within the corporation. "It helps them function better," Hopkinson states.

Hopkinson worked on a production crew during his weeks at Boeing. "I tried to follow (a project) from the work order to the finished project," he says.

He also examined the media departments of the Safeco Insurance Co., Washington Natural Gas and the Seattle Police Department which employ less than a handful of people as compared to Boeing's MPTV department of 25 to 30 people. Hopkinson said most of these people had some college education but few of them had college degrees. Many were long-term employees of Boeing and photography was their life after 4 p.m.

Hopkinson told his winter term Media Productions class that he thinks the Mass Comm. Department should provide more job counseling (possibly mandatory) for students to gear them towards narrower choices in their studies and their internships. And he provided lengthy questionnaires for these students, most of whom are within a term of graduating, which asked specific questions about skills and interests. Hopkinson will use this data to counsel these students later in the term.

"I can be a more accurate advisor now," he says.

A projected $20,000 deficit in LCC Food Service has forced a management decision to close the snack bar on campus in the evenings at 6 p.m. -- instead of at 9:30 p.m.

According to Jack Carter, vice-president for Student Services, the deficit is due in part to the decreased student enrollment and to "fewer night classes."

October and November, generally the biggest months for Food Services revenue, have brought in less money than in the past years.

Food Service Manager Bob Tegge noted that during Fall Term in the evenings at around 7 p.m. "no one was around" but there was still a cafeteria crew that included a cook, cashier, supervisor and dish-washer.

"Food service cannot operate in the red," says Carter, who adds the evening operation has "in the past several years, never paid for itself." Tegge says that last year, the evening operation was a "service more than a business."

In addition, Tegge noted that this year during the 6 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. period, the salaries of the cafeteria crew were higher and that sales averaged $78 to $100, compared with $500 netted in previous years during that same time period.

However, students and faculty that are on campus in the evenings need not feel that some of their needs are not taken care of. The college has installed three vending machines in addition to the existing machines in the cafeteria. These three machines are located at the far end of the Snack Bar near the Student Health Center and provide hot as well as cold drinks and snacks too. To assure the supply is ample for evening students, these vending machines have been programmed to operate specifically only during 6 p.m. and 9 p.m.

Carter hopes to see the resumption of evening operation of the snack bar in the future.

Cahill - McLeod LCC's new SRC director

by Brad Jeske
TORCH Staff Writer

The Student Resource Center (SRC) has a new director -- Mass Communications major Pat Cahill-McLeod.

Cahill-McLeod says she's "pretty excited" and sees student government as a wonderful opportunity for students to express themselves. "There are very few places where I feel I could've gotten a job like this one," she states. She cites going to the opening of the state Legislative session on Jan. 14 as an example of an activity that she would not ordinarily have easy access to.

If you need a place to live, a child day care referral, or a ride to school the SRC may be able to help.

Located on the second floor of the Center Building, outside the library, the SRC offers information on the above topics on a bulletin board as well as providing a microwave oven and lounge area for community use.

Cahill-McLeod says two new services will be added soon. One is a new co-op child facet of the SRC. "The SRC is in charge of recycling in all departments here at Lane," says Cahill-McLeod. She added, "Recycling is the big money maker. It pays for almost all of the Student Resource Center," in addition to the benefits of conserving paper.

Cahill-McLeod says, "We're always open and would like suggestions. Students should know about the SRC, we're there for them."

Innovator will find challenge and fun elsewhere

by Sharen Hulegaard
TORCH Staff Writer

Seventeen years ago when Howard Dull first became an employee of LCC, he was 40 years old and LCC was a mere babe of 3 -- even the trees that give such a color show to the Fall campus were saplings.

Some time during the first week of March this year, Dull will take his retirement as Mechanics Department chairman.

After 17 years of eating, breathing, and sleeping LCC, it is reasonable to assume that Howard Dull will feel some pangs as he clears the last of his belongings out of his homey little office in the Mechanics Building, and realizes that it is for the last time. It's equally reasonable to assume the pangs will have disappeared by March 23. It would be difficult to feel too morose basking in the sun on the deck of a cruise ship in the Caribbean, which is exactly where Dull will be on that date.

Born in Iowa, graduated from high school in San Francisco, he studied at the University of Idaho and then entered the Army (1944 through early 1946) where, at the tender age of 19 he was appointed Sergeant Major. "That was a biggie for me . . . until I found out that being a Sergeant Major is just one heck of a lot of work and a lot of long hours."

Dull moved to Oregon in 1947, after his discharge from the Army, and began working in the automobile industry -- in dealerships, including ones with Edsels and Hudsons. He operated his own Lincoln-Mercury dealership from 1955-65, then sold it and moved to Eugene where he again became involved in the automobile industry in various capacities.

Dull first entered the field of education working for School

Dist. 4 as a Mechanics Teacher at South Eugene High School. In 1967, while still working at South Eugene, Dull became a part-time Adult Education Teacher in Mechanics at LCC, a position which evolved into a full-time teaching assignment in 1969.

He taught for a total of three years, introducing new concepts to the existing theories of teaching, including developing the first apprenticeship training programs for Automechanics and Autobody. He became head of the Mechanics Department 10 years ago.

Department Management With an Accordion

Among his many interests, Dull has played the accordion since he was eight years old, often entertaining at picnics and small gatherings. In fact, he keeps a US Government accordion in his office -- one of the many which Mechanics Department students repaired several years ago when, for some reason, the government shed accordians as "excess property."

Jim Piercey, dean of Applied Technology, says Dull schedules department meeting once a month, starting promptly at 3 p.m. If anyone is late, Dull begins playing the accordion until that person arrives. According to Piercey, "no one is late anymore."

Dull describes the people in his department as being "a very challenging group. They aren't a group that has to be pushed," he states -- the real task is to "try to knock down the road blocks (for them), and make sure that they aren't slowed down." Couple that with the fact that they're always on time to Department meetings and one gets a picture of an efficient group of people.

When asked what he felt his most significant and satisfying contributions were at LCC, he cited two: Developing the Individualized Learning Modules Program in mechanics, and focusing national attention on the LCC Insurance Adjustors Training Program.

But "cite" is about all Howard will do when speaking of himself. He may play his own accordion but he does not toot his own horn.

It is Jim Piercey, Dull's immediate supervisor for many years, who explains the significance of Dull's contributions.

Individualized Learning

Piercey describes how, after Dull had worked as a classroom teacher for several years, working in curriculum development through "individualized modules," the College assigned him release time for one year to go out on campus and talk to any other instructors in any other Dull's resulting "individualized learning plan" made it possible for a student to "come in and start school tomorrow." Piercey says "Howard could never accept the fact that we started in September and finished two years later in June. He thought people should be able to start in November, or February, or Friday morning . . . Whenever they wanted to go to school, that should be the day that they should be allowed to start. As a teacher, an instructor, he started that process. He said 'there's got to be a way to make this work,' and he did."

LCC Downtown Center now offers students health and women's services

by Monte Muirhead
TORCH Staff Writer

Students who attend the LCC Downtown Center are receiving easier access to medical service since Student Health Services (SHS) opened a "branch" clinic there last term that's open two hours a week.

The downtown clinic, which is partially subsidized by student body fees, is being offered in the hopes of providing more access for students who might otherwise have difficulty getting to the SHS office on the LCC main campus, according to Sandra Ing, director of SHS.

"We feel a responsibility to serve them (downtown) also," says Ing. Students can receive blood pressure tests, throat cultures, and tuberculosis screening at the downtown clinic, and of course can ask for advice and help on specific health matters.

Sharon Kealoha, a full-time SHS clinic nurse, coordinates the downtown clinic and is one of its staffers. In fact, the downtown clinic's staff is composed entirely of workers from the main clinic, although SHS isn't receiving any budget increases or additional staff members to compensate for the downtown venture.

Hours for the downtown clinic are 12:30-2:30 on

"Howard is a totally unselfish individual" states Piercey. The individualized modules concept was not just his idea for his department -- it was an educational concept that he felt could be developed and used by educators in many fields. Examples of the application of his concept are the Vocational Communications in the Language Arts Department, and Individualized Music Studies in the Performing Arts Department.

Dull's innovative work in the field of Individualized Learning Modules also brought him a one-year assignment to the State Department of Education for a state-wide project on the development of teaching strategies.

His Individualized Learning Package concept earned him recognition throughout the Northwest. He started it at Lane and then trained people at other community colleges around the state: Linn-Benton, Umpqua, and Southwestern Oregon. Then, according to Piercey, "word got out and Oregon State University came here and tried to hire him. He said 'No, I'll just do it for you -- I have time. Have them (instructors) come on Saturdays. I'll take care of it,' and he did."

Insurance Adjusting: Nationally Known Program
"LCC is the only two-year institution in the United States that trains baccalaureate-level insurance adjusters" states Piercey.

Women's Awareness Center Coordinator Izetta Hunter will work downtown.

Wednesdays. As yet, the college has no plans to offer medical services to evening students at LCC, but Ing says that it's a possibility for the future.

Another new feature at the LCC Downtown Center is the Women's Center "information referral" service recently instituted there for one day a week.

According to Bev Behrman, LCC's Women's Program Director, the program at the downtown center will offer some of the same services that the Women's Center on the main campus has: giving information and referring people to the appropriate places for problems ranging from battering and rape to housing and financial aid.

Izetta Hunter, the Women's Center coordinator, will be at the downtown center on Fridays from 8 a.m. until 5

"Howard thought that was pretty neat so he started calling people, and he's traveled from Boston to the Southern tips of California talking to Insurance Adjusting Companies, trying to convince them to go to their local community colleges to initiate the program that we have -- and they've done it. They tried to pay him for it but he always declined payment . . . he just said 'if you'd buy my ticket that would be nice.' He's really into his job -- really believes in what he's doing."

Howard Dull's reputation will be hard to follow. Like Dull, his replacement, Ted Kotsakis, coming from Lower Columbia Community College in Longview, WA., has performed as both head of a Department of Mechanics, and is currently teaching mechanics. Kotsakis is due to arrive around the first week in Feb. and will be able to work with Dull for about 30 days.

Both Dull and Piercey express very positive feelings about Kotsakis' ability to take over the job of Dept. Head. "He (Kotsakis) is equally unique but, of course, entirely different. I see great things in our future, but in a whole different vein," states Piercey.

After the Caribbean Cruise, and several weeks in Florida visiting family, Dull and his wife intend to move to Florence, OR, where they've had a home for years. There he intends to do commercial fishing on his boat the "Torchy", sell his catch of fish and crab . . . and of course, play his accordion.

Dotted line shows 100 acres of land donated by Eugene Industrialist Wilford H. Gonyea, and an additional 50 acres purchased from him at half the assessed value.

This billboard shows the proposed layout of the Lane Community College campus.

Editor's note: This is the first of a four part series documenting the history of LCC's construction.

From its humble beginning at 200 North Monroe in Eugene and South Fourth in Springfield in 1964, LCC grew to be a leader in Oregon community colleges.

On Sept. 20, 1966 voters in Lane County went to the polls to approve a $9.9 million tax base for construction of a two-year community college campus. With enrollment outgrowing its present locations, LCC needed a larger, centrally located campus.

Five sites were considered for the campus - the east shore of Fern Ridge Lake, adjacent to the Mahlon Sweet Airport Terminal, the Shelly property where I-5 meets I-105, downtown Cottage Grove, and the Russell Creek site at the end of East 30th Ave.

LCC Board of Education members decided on the Russell Creek site because, according to former Presidential Assistant Bert Dotson, 90 percent of the district

Grading and terracing on the site was done by the C and H Durbin Company.

The first stage of construction involved the excavation of nearly one mile of service tunnels under the buildings. The work was not visible from 30th Avenue for several months.

population would be within a 30-minute drive of the campus. Oakridge was the only exception.

The donation of 100 acres of land by Eugene industrialist Wilford H. Gonyea was another deciding factor. Gonyea also offered the college a chance to purchase an additional 100 acres at half the appraised value. The board decided to purchase only 50 of these acres at $500 an acre and an additional 7.8 acres was donated by another party in exchange for use of one of the sewage ponds.

The Russell Creek area was originally settled by William and Eleanor Limeric Moore 131 years ago on a Donation Land Claim. They used it for light farming and raised cattle, but later discovered the high arsenic content in the ground to be the cause of illness among their stock.

Groundbreaking ceremonies on Jan. 6, 1967 marked the beginning of construction of the descendant of the Eugene Vocational School -- LCC.

Building began with the Air Technology, Auto Technology buildings.

LCC's first president, Dale Parnell demonstrates how easy it is to begin building a college campus.

Dignitaries at the groundbreaking ceremonies included Senator Wayne Morse, U of O President Arthur Flemming, LCC Student Body President Robert Wimberly, Gerald Rasmussen, and Eugene Mayor Edwin Cone.

Millions of tons of earth were moved during construction of the tunnels under the campus buildings.

Mother received LCC help, but her children won't

by Cindy Weeldreyer
TORCH Staff Writer

On a cold winter day two years ago, a friendly black cat with a croaky meow appeared in the Community Education area of the Apprenticeship Building. At first, office workers ignored the congenial animal, obviously someone's workers "take care" of a very small part of it. "Our cats pretty much stay in our area," says Nancy Fausone, an administrative assistant in the Industrial Technology Program.

Two years ago some of the employees built a house for "Mom" and her family to provide needed shelter and tens there. Many of the "Pizza Hut" cats will come and eat in the Community Ed area.

But feeding cats on a daily basis is expensive. Trisha Fuller, a records clerk in the High School Completion Program, has had the primary responsibility of the feline friends for two years, while she, Fausone, and Debbie Powers, an Adult Basic Education secretary, share the costs. Many LCC faculty members have also donated money to feed the cats and have them spayed or neutered.

Fuller fed five cats during the day and even more at night. "We don't know exactly how many cats eat at night, but it may easily be a dozen or more," says Fausone. The nocturnal diners are not all "Mom's" cats. Some are "wild" cats that come for the free food and others are pets that have been dumped on campus.

Fuller and Fausone try to find homes for the animals. In the fall of 1983, Fausone and co-worker Judy North placed a "Cabbage Patch Cat" ad in the Daily. "We were willing to provide a family history and adoption papers to entice people to take a cat home," Fausone says. They received calls commenting on how cute the ad was, but no response for adoptions.

Eight of "Mom's" offspring have now found homes, including "Mom" herself. Fuller and Fausone agree that "Mom" was such a sweetheart that taking care of her was a labor of love. With "Mom's" croaky meow now gone, the Community Ed workers have only their memories of her. Fuller and "Mom" had a very special relationship. According to Fausone, "When Trish would go on vacation, 'Mom' would take off and not return until Trish did."

Now the good-hearted caretakers want to get rid of all the cats. They are renting cages from the Greenhill Humane Society in order to trap the remaining family members and take them to the humane society. "We hope they can be tamed and adopted, but we fear they will be exterminated," says Fausone. The special cage requires a $30 refundable deposit and a $2 daily rental fee per cage. Fuller and Fausone indicated they could use some help to cover the temporary costs of trapping the remaining family -- before the remaining offspring create even more unofficial campus mascots.

Tracy heads for war torn Honduras . . . peacefully

by John Egan
TORCH Staff Writer

Like most of us, U of O graduate and former LCC Language Arts student Tracy Smith has been following the recent developments in Central America closely. And for her they may have even more significance.

Next week Tracy will leave Eugene for Honduras as a assistance, should make her an asset in Honduras, which is in need of people with her qualifications. But, although her official title will be a Cooperative Advisor for Small Business Assistance, Tracy is remaining flexible, and is prepared for anything. "If I end up digging ditches or teaching people to sew," she said, "that's great."

Former LCC student Tracy Smith will leave for Honduras this month.

Peace Corps volunteer. "I've always wanted to join the Peace Corps," explained Tracy, "It's an ambition I've had for several years."

In her application to the Peace Corps, Tracy indicated a desire to be sent to Kenya or any other African country, and ironically, Central America was the last place she wanted to be sent. But, during her initial interview, she soon realized that by applying to Central America she would have a better chance of getting an assignment, because of her Spanish speaking background.

Tracy's degree in economics, and previous experience in small business

With the ongoing turmoil in Nicaragua and El Salvador, countries that border Honduras, one would expect to find Tracy at least hesitant about leaving, yet during the Russian ship controversy in Nicaragua, she was actually more concerned about not going than going. "The fear that people there have of death in America is ten times greater than the fear I have of Central America," said Tracy, who for awhile was concerned that the Peace Corps might feel that it was unsafe to send her.

But now, with just a few days to go before she leaves, nothing has changed, and Tracy will be one of seven new Peace Corps trainees entering Honduras, which has had more than fifteen-hundred volunteers enter its country since 1962.

After arriving in Honduras, Tracy will spend twelve weeks in Santa Lucia, a mountain town near the capitol city of Tegucigalpa, for in-country training. She will then be assigned to a permanent location for the duration of her two-year term. She is extremely excited about leaving. "The political climate in Honduras is changing fast," she said, "and to have the opportunity to watch those changes take place is really exciting."

Students who are interested in finding out more about the Peace Corps should contact the Corps representative at the Career Planning and Placement Department in Susan Campbell Hall, at the U of O.

Cat bites the hand that feeds him

by Cindy Weeldreyer
TORCH Staff Writer

On the morning of Dec. 19, a kitten bit two LCC employees who were attempting to rescue the animal. Both employees received tetanus shots for their efforts.

Donna Morgan, a communications-data specialist in Campus Services and Joanne Payne, an assessor in the Life Experience Assessment Program, responded to a report of some kittens trapped in the Food Services dumpsters.

Morgan climbed into the dumpster to retrieve two kittens by handing them to Payne to put in a box. As Morgan handed Payne the second kitten, it bit Payne's thumb, and Morgan's index finger. "It was a bloody mess," said Morgan. Payne later took the boxed kittens to the Greenhill Humane Society for observation.

The women made several phone calls to determine if a tetanus shot was needed. "We received conflicting information from the various people we talked to," Payne said. But to be safe, the women decided to get the shots.

According to Payne, "Some people think LCC is a good place to dump their animals, hoping others will take them (the animals) home. It is cruel and unfair to subject any domestic animal to the schizophrenia that occurs as the animal learns to be wild." Payne feels if owners are unwilling to find another home for their animals, it would be better to have the animals humanely destroyed than abandoned somewhere.

Morgan warns others not to attempt to pick up any cats on campus -- no matter how friendly they appear. When asked if she would rescue any cats in the future Morgan replied, "I'll never do it again."

pet, until its pregnancy was discovered.

Community Ed workers began feeding "Mom," who later gave birth to three kittens. They later caught "Mom" and had her spayed, but her babies were just too fast to be caught. The kittens quickly multiplied into at least three generations of black cats.

Now there is a growing cat population on the LCC campus and Community Ed warmth. "We're now on our third house--the first two were stolen--and we've secured this one to a heavy weight. We are the only Oregon community college I know of to have a house for cats," says Fausone. Unfortunately, awareness of "the house" may be the cause of even more cats being dumped at LCC.

• Other events being planned by Bryan Moore and the cultural committee include a jazz vocalist, films, bands, and political forums.

LCC students receive award

by Margaret Beckett
TORCH Staff Writer

Two first year students at LCC, Shannon Trucke and Natalin Goodrich, received the Wes Thayer Award "for outstanding public service in preventing alcohol abuse" at a special ceremony held in Portland on Dec. 8, 1984.

The award, presented by the Oregon Liquor Control Commission, recognized their efforts in organizing, and maintaining Concerned High School Student's Alternative to Drugs, a drug awareness program to educate their fellow students at Churchill High School, and Kennedy and Jefferson Junior High Schools.

The two first became interested in creating the program after viewing the film "The Chemical People" in health class -- which presented examples of drug dependent children.

Their concern for themselves and other students grew, and they proposed organizing a group to improve awareness of the drug and alcohol abuse problems at Churchill High School.

Many teachers and staff members didn't believe there was any "real" drug use problem. To convince the faculty and staff of the worth of their project, Trucke and Goodrich cautiously estimated 85 percent of the student body actively used chemical substances. Shocked, the faculty demanded verification. A student survey proved the estimate to be accurate.

As a direct result of their efforts, a 14-year old ninth grader received medical care which probably saved her from fatal alcohol poisoning.

A teacher, suspicious of the girl's giddy behavior, followed her into a restroom, and then took her to the nurse's office. Shortly after arriving in the office, the girl collapsed, and her blood pressure plummeted, necessitating atropine injections to stimulate her blood pressure. The instructor's enhanced awareness and action prevented the girl's death, and helped to convince the school of the necessity of the program. Trucke and Goodrich were credited with saving the ninth grader's life.

The program's structure involved four group leaders -- Trucke, Goodrich, Melissa Vilvin, and Keith Stewart. Beginning with a presentation to assemblies of 60 to 100 students which featured a modified version of "The Funniest Joke in the World" -- a comedy about a drunken man, the assembly returned to classrooms where each leader further educated students during a question and answer period which included role playing and questionnaires.

Students were taught to say

"no" when subjected to peer pressure, and then given "no thank you" buttons they could wear to openly express their views, and reinforce the program's message.

Trucke and Goodrich feel their success is due in part to their experience, and their new interest in preventing substance abuse, "you can't teach what you haven't been through yourself," they observed.

The program has since been turned over to the school for continuation, and similar programs aimed at grade school children are being developed.
