TAKE BACK THE NIGHT

During the May 16 Take Back the Night march and rally against violence toward women, participants proudly flaunted t-shirt slogans such as PRIDE, SAFETY and WOMAN (lower right). Other participants carried signs as they paraded down West 11th with the peaceful crowd. One sign read: NO MORE DATE RAPE.

Two students (left) pass the "safety flame" at the rally at the UO EMU amphitheater. Both women and men joined together to listen to speakers, to march and unite: "Every woman has a right to be safe ... Every person has the right to be safe."

Political cheer leaders (above right) lead the crowd in chants such as, "Women united, will never be divided," and "Racist, sexist, anti-gay, you can't take our streets away."

Rally will educate students on racial profiling

Björn Storck for The Torch

What is "racial profiling"?
Racial profiling occurs when the police target someone for investigation solely on the basis of the person's skin color,
national origin, or ethnicity.

national origin, or ethnicity.
At noon on Thursday, May 23, the Black Student Union will hold a rally and discussion at Bristow Square on the topic of racial profiling, titled "Know Your Rights."

The event is held "to raise awareness about civil rights for people (and) to gain a better understanding of how to interact with the police," says Gregory Dunkin, BSU spokesperson and newly elected ASLCC president for 2002-2003.

The event will include a keynote speaker, Sen. Vicki Walker, who will shape focus on the event. Then Eugene police officers will review the dos and don'ts for when citizens interact with the police. They will also inform students how to file a formal complaint in case of unjust targeting (racial profiling).

The American Civil Liberties Union will discuss the loss of student rights due to the US Patriot Act. It will attend the event to spread awareness of student rights since the Patriot Act was passed on Oct. 26, 2001, says Terri Riggins of the BSII.

Barbara Delansky, Student Life and Leadership Development director, will explain the campus complaint process in the case of racial profiling.

Commission chooses Torch editor for 2002-2003

Skye MacIvor

LCC's Media Commission — a group of 16 faculty, staff and student representatives — named Sarah Ross as Torch editor in chief on May 16.

Derek Olson, a first-year journalism student from North Dakota and Torch managing editor, also competed for the position.

The Denali editor position remains open; the commission will consider further applicants in fall 2002.

"I'm really excited," says Ross, who served as Torch news editor this year. "I know it's going to be a lot of work, but I'm looking forward to the opportunity to provide leadership at the paper and continue developing my journalistic skills."

Ross, 38-years-old, entered LCC in fall 2001 to consider a career change and study journalism. In 1996, she earned her bachelor's of science degree in computer science from the UO.

This year, in addition to her work at The Torch, she helped Marcola High School start a small student newspaper, and organized a journalism workshop at a recent conference called Options, which introduced middle school girls to non-traditional professions — careers employing less than 25 percent of women.

"(I know) how well she works with students," says Ann Green, Torch staff writer and media commission member. Green appreciates Ross's sense of humor, and says Ross listens to students and knows how to motivate them.

"I think she will do a really good job. She knows when to ask for help and when to look outside for solutions. She's aware."

Ross realizes her term as editor will include challenges.

"Recruiting and retaining staff people is always a challenge at a student paper," she says.

And she knows "working without long-time Torch advisers Pete Peterson, (retiring news and editorial adviser), and Jan Brown, (retiring advertising adviser)," will also be a difficult transition.

Another challenge will be dealing with The Torch's changed budget. During the LCC Board of Education's budget cutting process in February, the college reduced The Torch budget by 54 per-

LCC refuses too-good-to-be-true Musemeci 'gift'

Amid the confusion and pressure of the college's budget cutting process last February, Arlie and Company, a property development business headed by John Musemeci, made a sugar-coated offer, which at first taste may have seemed appealing for LCC's financial administra-

But the LCC Board of Education and administration practiced responsible stewardship and refused the 'gift."

Musemeci proposed to buy LCC's 100 acre Jay Marston Forest. And to help LCC with its financial difficulties by giving the LCC Foundation $500,000, upgrading the sewer system for $1,320,000, and leasing - at no cost — 20 acres he owns adjacent to campus to the college for 99 years.

The deal seems sweet, but is Skye Mcgvor LCC's Marston Forest is a Editor In Chief valuable educational resource. The donation to the LCC Foundation would be a one-time offer that would not solve longterm funding problems. The sewer upgrade is already paid through a 1995 voter-approved bond measure (the money cannot be used to fund programs). And the 20 acres Musemeci offers on lease do not meet the college's needs.

In 1996, McDougal Brothers Inc., also approached LCC with a land swap request, and the college refused the McDougal offer. Ironically, the McDougal's 20 acre parcel adjacent to the college, offered, in the 1996 proposal is now owned by Musemeci and friends, and is the same parcel Musemeci wished to lease to the college in 2002.

What is it about LCC's 100 acres that makes real estate speculators drool?

For one thing, it's five times as much land as the 20 acre parcel both companies tried to entice LCC into accepting. For another, the Marston Forest is a 'diverse tract of land with numerous natural habitat types," according to a Feb. 8, 1996 LCC Science Department letter to former LCC President Jerry Moskus.

The former McDougal and current Arlie property has been "logged for the commercial value of its Douglas Fir," the letter stat-

LCC's unique forest should be preserved in its current diverse state. If a land development company like McDougal Brothers Inc. or Arlie Company owned Marston Forest, it might cash-in on the economic value of the timber, destroying a valuable ecosystem.

The LCC Science Department also wrote, "(T)he LCC forest consists of at least four distinct botanical elements, including a stand of native Ponderosa Pine, a maturing Douglas Fir stand now developing attributes of an old growth forest, several hardwood stands, and grassland areas. ... (T)he habitat diversity is much greater than the McDougal property proposed for exchange."

But Musemeci wrote a May 7 letter about the real estate proposal to Mary Spilde which states, (W)hen we offered as part of our gift, to purchase land from the college, we thought it was unused, surplus land. We did not know that students in your science department use the land. Our purchase offer was intended to convert unused property into cash that the college desperately needed. We intended to dedicate the parcel as park and had no development plans for it."

But intentions are not always reality. And in the future, other land development companies may covet LCC's prime 100 acre parcel. What other reason than development would tempt a company to buy LCC's land? If I understand the purpose of the land speculation business correctly, real estate developers purchase land they intend to hold for financial gain, not to preserve as park land.

I admire the board's courage, caution and sound judgment in refusing to relinquish a valuable community resource. The board acted as wise steward's of LCC's resources.

The college should continue to allow the Marston Forest to grow into a diverse system, valuable for scientific research.

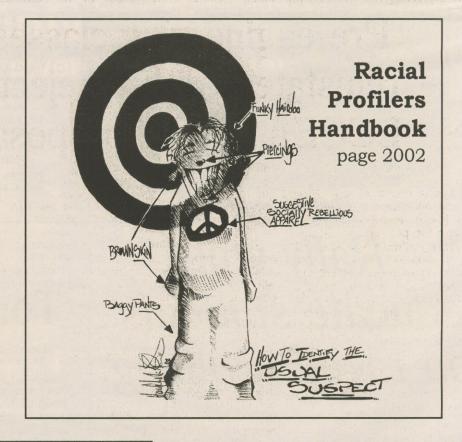

But Lane also set a greater precedent, that of acting in the best interest of the public by preserving the environmental integrity of its priceless forest.

Letter to the Editor

Outraged at campus thief

This letter is to the person or persons who are breaking into cars and stealing from others on the main campus. On May 14, you (and your thugs) stooped to a new low. Don't you have anything better to do than to scope out cars and the bike racks to take something that is not yours? That's right. You stole my bicycle seat and stem for my bike. Not only that, but I have to now remove it everyday and carry it to my office because you do not have the willingness to get a job. What's even worse is that you may have done it just for kicks, and have tossed the seat into some bushes. What a waste! I have been working and leaving my bicycle here without a problem for 10 years. Now I can't even do that. I hope you are happy. I still trust people. Unfortunately, there is now one less person I can trust: YOU!

Event fosters discussion about Israeli-Palestinian conflict

Student José Soto organized the educational forum.

An American flag hangs from the front edge of a table in LCC's cafeteria. A small sign next to it asks, "What does this flag stand for?" Hourieh Khalil, an LCC student from Jordan, stands behind a podium near the table. She speaks in a quiet, emotion-filled voice amplified by a microphone.

"Suicide bombers are people that have been oppressed for so long their only solution is to blow-up themselves," she says, trying to explain the frustration felt by Palestinians living in refuge camps on Israel's West Bank.

"The Israelis have tanks and Apache helicopters and the Americans are behind them."

She asks those listening how the Palestinian people

The forum was organized by LCC student José Soto. Last April, in an effort to get students talking about the U.S. role in the conflict, Soto hung a ten-foot high banner in the lobby of the Students Services Building asking, "What is the Israeli government doing?" He says this forum was intended to be an outlet for students' responses to that banner.

He invited speakers from Eugene's Middle East Peace group, the City of Eugene Human Rights Commission and any student who felt the need to say something.

And say something they Self-proclaimed did. Zionists, Palestinian Arabs, native Israelis and LCC students learning about the conflict in their classes voiced a broad range of Pruitt said he first became interested in the Middle East conflict last year when his sociology instructor at Southwestern Community College began talking about the issue in class.

Pre-engineering classes reinstated, Board rejects LCCEA budget proposal

Sarah Ross

LCC's Board of Education voted unanimously to reverse its March decision to recommend the pre-engineering program for elimination. The program was originally included on a list of proposed college-wide budget cuts to meet a $7.25 million deficit next year.

But at its May 8 meeting the board approved a proposal to use a combination of industry support, tuition-based sections, and general fund money to continue the program, says Kyle Hammon, Interim Science Division chair.

Still on the block

Other programs did not fare as well. The board rejected program generated proposals save the Chemical Counselor Dependency Training program, the Law Enforcement Reserve Academy, Broadcasting/Visual Design and Production, and cuts to instruction in the physical sciences. Although Steve John, interim Vice President for Instruction said a new tuition-based support model being tried this summer may generate revenue to save the physical science classes.

Tuition-based sections are paid for directly by the tuition from the students enrolled in that class. Students won't be able to tell the difference between tuition-based classes and those paid for out of the general fund, explains John. But he says the new funding mechanism allows the college to serve more students with a smaller pot of money.

The administration did accept a proposal from the Adult High School program that will allow current students to continue their studies through winter term 2003.

Although several students and staff including Patti Lake, division chair of Adult Basic and Secondary Education, and Jennifer Gainer, ASLCC president, spoke passionately on behalf of the adult high school, there was no support on the board for a motion to reconsider its elimination.

LCCEA proposal

The administration and faculty union continued to disagree over the administration's budget projection figures and the need for cuts to instructional programs.

The administration rejected an LCCEA proposal to split the cost of hiring an outside party to analyze the college's budget

LCC President Mary Spilde said the administration has met with union representatives three times to "clarify" the LCCEA proposal and to provide information requested by the union.

But Spilde said, "(The administration) is not planning to change any of our recommendations, nor are we asking (the board) to change any of the decisions (it has) made.

Dennis Gilbert, LCCEA bargaining team chair, said, "The union acknowledges there are financial problems, but seeking community support can address these issues.

Our concern is that some cuts are irreversible. Our aim is to show that in the short-term there is the money available to keep instructional programs."

More to come...

Spilde told the board that when it comes to state funding "the word that prevails is 'uncertainty.'"

Spilde said the college may face an additional two percent reduction in state funds for next year.

Strategic Learning Initiative

In an annual report on the college's Strategic Learning Initiative, a group of close to 15 faculty and students shared their experiences in LCC's Learning Communities and Service Learning classes with the board.

SLI is a faculty-led effort to create innovative learning experiences for students at LCC. The speakers emphasized the importance of both programs to the quality of education at Lane.

New, automated system streamlines counseling check-in

Rebecca Jones for The Torch

Students no longer need to fill out forms to see an advisor or counselor; instead, they simply click on a mouse.

An automated student check-in system, implemented April 18 in the Counseling Department, reduces paperwork, streamlines check-in and organizes data.

"It's a lot easier than waiting in line," says LCC Student Amanda Fitzpatrick. "It takes a lot less time."

And boxes upon boxes of student check-in forms are no longer a concern for earth-wise students and staff since the new system eliminates the need for reams of full-page triplicate forms.

Upon entering the counseling office, a student now uses one of four computers to check in, chooses the type of preferred counseling or career advising, views the counselors' drop-in hours and selects the name of an available advisor or counselor.

A cue then appears on the counselor's office computer screen, indicating that a student is waiting. With just a command on the keyboard the counselor can bring up the student's records.

One of the biggest benefits of the new system is the elimination of all the "back and forth" travels staff members would undertake during the day, says counselor Douglas Smyth, the four-year veteran of LCC's department who initiated the project.

"To keep up with service, you'd really have to get up every two minutes, walk out there and see if there was a student waiting for you, and that's not a very efficient way," he said of the old system.

The department's computerization committee worked on the concept, then contracted a local software writing company, operated by LCC software development instructor Mari Good, to write the program.

In addition to the new check-in system, the program features a data system that stores information by student name and category.

Smyth adds that every bit of information is sorted, filed and stored, eliminating hundreds of extra hours required of a limited clerical staff.

rock-throwing Palestinians, confrontations between Israeli soldiers and Palestinian civilians, and the frantic efforts of ambulance attendants and emergency room physicians to repair bloodied, broken bodies on stretchers and gurneys being rushed into Israeli and Palestinian hospitals.

On the table next to the speakers podium was a photo album with pictures of Palestinian youths playing and living in rubble strewn streets, running from Israeli tanks, and throwing rocks at soldiers.

Next to the album were stacks of wallet-sized cards listing the rights of civilians who are stopped by the police in America. The cards, which are compiled by the ACLU, were printed and distributed at the event by LCC's Black Student Union.

The heads of Israeli, Palestinian and other Arab students nod in unison as ASLCC Treasurer Brett Force spoke his mind.

"Extremists on both sides need to be removed from power — if not, this violence will never end." Force says he is talking about terrorist groups but is also referring to Palestinian leader Yassar Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon.

Robin Souma, an LCC Broadcast and Visual Design major, sat at a table listening to the speakers and watching the TVs.

"It horrifies me — what's going on. They're out of control.

"Do we wait for Arafat and Sharon to die? How do we get them out of office?" she asks, an urgent frustration filling her words. "It just makes your heart weep for humanity."

Abdullah Al-Hemyare, from Yemen on the south coast of the Saudi Arabian Peninsula and living in Eugene since 1986, is a member of the Middle East Peace group.

"There is hope if people learn to get along and share that piece of land," he says. "I support the idea of two states side-by-side. Enough is enough."

Al-Hemyare says he would like to see the U.S. government get more involved in the peace process and encourages American citizens to support peace groups in Israel.

"It's not a religious war, it's a land war," he insists.

"Islam and Judaism ... have so much in common. They both descend from Abraham ... they both believe in one God and the ten commandments."

He says, "There are extremists on both sides — some Palestinians want more (land) than the 1967 (boundaries), and some Jews don't want any (Palestinian) state. We have to be realistic."

But last week students approved four new ASLCC ballot measures, including a request from The Torch to increase the Mandatory Student Activity Fee by $1.75 per term. This is a new funding source, and "figuring out what the impact is going to be and still providing a quality product" is a puzzle Ross must solve.

But she says the first challenge is to recruit her core staff.

"I would like to get regular student columnists sharing their different voices and opinions."

Ross's other goals for 2002-2003 include special sections each term "on local or even international issues that are important to students."

For fall term, she says one possible special section is a voter's guide for the November 2002 elections. She says the guide would examine candidates and ballot measures from the students' and college's perspectives

Also, the repercussions from the war in Afghanistan and the Middle East conflict are issues Ross says may affect the college. "We'd like to keep in touch with those issues," she says.

She says she would like the student staff to investigate "what the college (will) look like and how students respond to programs cut and reduced."

And she says she will cover "student government and the variety of student groups that sponsor events and activities for the student body."

The Torch is a student-run, independent newspaper. The editorial board makes all decisions about content and news policy.

Ross would like to provide a "relevant and worthwhile hands-on learning experience for the students who work at the paper."

Drummer helps LCC keep its beat

Valerie Link Assistant A&E Editor

Some people find out what their life's work is in college; others discover it during high school. Then there are those who start doing what they're meant to be doing before they even learn their multiplication tables. Alan Tarpinian found his calling when he was 7-

Tarpinian, originally from Norwalk, Conn., has been playing drums for almost his entire lifetime. At the age of 7, after watching his brother play bugle in a drum and bugle corps, he decided that it would be fun to try the drums. Now he's a freelance drummer and independent drum instructor.

Tarpinian teaches from his home, and occasionally helps out with LCC's jazz band, big band and plays in the yearly Faculty Jazz Tarpinian earned a bachelor's degree from the New England Conservatory in classical guitar, an instrument he has been playing since the age of 13.

"The discipline of classical guitar is something that drummers don't often experience. You have to really get inside of the music. It's very intricate. Also, classical guitarists can't often experience the music flowing as you can in jazz. I use the drums to help the music flow when I play guitar."

Tarpinian is married and has two children. He has been the secretary for the previous 10 years at the Musicians Association, a local musician's union. And he has been passing his love of music down to his children. His son, James, is a big band pianist and student Lane's women's cross country and field team member Christina Bell sets a new LCC women's record by clearing 11'6" in the pole vaulting competition at an NWAACC division championship.

Titans trample the field

Daniel A. Bartzen Staff Writer

The culmination of a stellar season for LCC's Track and Field teams ends May 22 and 23, when the Titans return from a two-day Northwest Athletic Association of Community Colleges Division Tournament at Mt. Hood Community College.

LCC's Head Cross Country and Field Coach Grady O'Connor says the team has a leg up on the competition following a one-two Decathlon finish April 29 and 30 from Gabe Lemay's 6832 points and Keith Baker's 6601 points. LCC hosted the championship.

Ashlyn Terry finished third for the women in the Heptathlon event to round out LCC's points to 24 going into the final tournament.

Baker and Terry may prove to be the team's high point scorers for the year with their successes in seven and five events respectively.

Mandy Peterson has placed high in the long distance 800, 1500, 3000, and 5000 meter events.

The Titan presence has been most noted in the 100 and 200 meter events as Nicole Brown and Skyler Reddington have resoundingly proven they are the most respected sprinters with the fastest times this year: 12:19 and 25:99, 10:58 and 21:63. Reddington suffered a injury recently, but hopes to return to cruising speed.

The team is anxiously awaiting our shot putters Dan Desmarteau, Evan Lybarger, and Josh Vanderhoof to finish one, two and three.

Her star has risen...

Christina Bell has raised the bar to new heights in pole vaulting. Her LCC record breaking height of 11'6", will guide and challenge future high jump travelers. In her first year of college her progress has exploded from her days at Sunset High School in Beaverton.

Bell credits her first record breaking to LCC pole-vaulting Coach Dan West an ex-Olympian coach and her teammates. She says that during practices all teammates jump, replace the bar and holler encouragement.

West and his team are proving an "individual" event garnishes better results with teamwork. West says he prefers training new pole vaulters, like Lemay who started this year jumping 8 feet and now exceeds 14 feet.

Titans ready for championship challenge

Sports Editor

The Titans head off to the Northwest Athletic Association of Community Colleges Championships with a goal clearly in mind.

"Basically, they have four days to redeem themselves for the whole season," assistant Danny Grice said.

Lane lost three of their last eight games in the final stretch of the season, moving from first place, to one game back of the Mt. Hood Saints in the Southern Division.

Assistant Coach Steve Wolf agreed, saying "I expect everyone to step up and surprise us as much as they disappointed in not winning the division, by playing championship caliber baseball."

Troy Grimmer, the winningest pitcher in the NWAACC, will likely start the first game for Lane.

"It should have been more," Grimmer said of his league-leading nine wins. "I've always pitched better against better teams." He added that after a week's rest, and he was ready to throw hard.

Lefties Aaron Mills, Mike Sammis and Ken Brock (a combined 17-5) will likely fill out the rotation.

The pitching has been steady all year, so the Titans really need to focus on hitting. Lane will need offensive support from all of its players, as the team is right in the middle of the pack in terms of batting average. But this season has seen all of the Titans step up and help win games. Porter Smith, who settled in as the Titans' leadoff hitter, led the team in both at bats and hits with 43.

Lane's slugger, Nick Currin, is right behind him with 41 hits in only 99 at bats. He also led the team in doubles (15), RBI's (30) and batting average (.414). "I didn't think about my stats all year, Currin said. "I guess my hitting just fell into place."

Anthony Taylor-Weber will be a welcome addition to the post season roster. After dealing with eligibility problems for the first half of the season, Taylor-Weber returned for the last 21 games, knocking in 20 runs and hitting three triples that tied him with Currin for first.

Earlier in the season, Head Coach Donny Harrel said the team needed to work on consistent team hitting. Lane has scored eleven runs or more in six of their games this season, so they are capable of breaking out the bats.

The Titans will face the Bellevue Community College Helmsmen (32-12) on the Helmsmen's home turf in the first round on May 23. But Lane isn't worried about it. This is a team stocked with players that support each other, and are ready to shoulder the burden. Catcher Justus Kimbrough echoed the thoughts of his teammates, when he said, "We want to end the year on a good note. I'll try and be a leader for the team, if they need me. We want to win this championship."
