SAFETYBLOTTER

PROTEST, OR POINTLESS?

Public Safety submitted a work order to remove graffiti that read "What About Electricity!?" in Building 5's second-floor bathroom. The meaning behind the message was not known at the time, but may refer to some of the power problems on campus.

Date: 3/4/2016 Location: Building 5

SUSPICIOUS VEHICLE

A black, four-door sedan was seen parked outside of the Child Care center, and sped off when a staff member walked toward it. Public Safety offices were unable to locate the vehicle.

Date: 3/4/2016 Location: Lot C

LOST AND FINED

Public Safety officers found a wallet in the cafeteria, and upon opening it to look for identification, they found marijuana. The officers were then able to easily identify the owner of the wallet, and issued them a citation.

Date: 3/2/2016 Location: Cafeteria

CREEP ALERT

A suspicious male was reported to be handing out fliers to only female students and asking them personal questions in the Center Building. At the time of the report, officers were only advised of the suspect, and did not confront him.

The Media Arts program will be relocated to Building 18 following a retrofit of the building to be completed by winter 2017. The remodel will accommodate advanced production studios, a resource center and new computer labs.

A PROGRAM DIVIDED

Construction splinters Media Arts program

By Miguel Sanchez-Rutledge Reporter

With the Center Building nearing completion, Lane is preparing to redevelop Building 18, the future home of the Media Arts program. During the year-long construction, Media Arts will be split between Buildings 17 and 18, and the Graphic Design program will be moved to Building 2.

Part of the the $83 million construction bond measure, passed in 2008, was designated for the Media Arts program. Initial construction was supposed to begin in the fall term, but due to earthquake prevention regulations, the construction was delayed. The Building 18 remodel is set to finish during winter term of 2017.

The project will have a maximum budget of $3 million, which will not be enough to complete what the faculty hope to achieve.

"We would love to build onto the back of it, but that's not going to happen with this budget," Jeff Goolsby, Media Arts coordinator, said. "We have to make it [the budget] work within the building as it exists."

The audio studio and photo mounting room will have to stay on the second floor of Building 17 due to the limited space available in Building 18.

"We can't fit it all into [Building] 18," Goolsby said.
"Rather than a new building or a major remodel, we're getting a moderate remodel."

Laura Hale, a media arts student, is worried about the proposal to decrease space for the program.

"I hope we are not robbed of our studio space," Hale said, "because we need something like our bluescreen — we need audio."

In spite of space concerns, media students can look forward to new studios, computer labs and live tutors.

"It will become the heart of media arts," Goolsby said. "It's going to really help the program in terms of progress and completion for students by giving them all the resources they need."

ACHIEVING DREAMS

OPINION

SHOW METHE MONEY

"I am hesitant right now on the wage increase, because if the wages increase then companies can say 'oh, we can charge more,' so it's an endless cycle."

> Bobby Kirkpatrick Lane Student

By Keasey Freed News Editor

Oregon's state government has recently passed a bill — Senate Bill 1532 — that will gradually raise minimum wage over the next six years.

The wage increase will vary depending on the population of a city. Eventually, Portland's minimum wage will increase to $14.75, the Eugene and Bend area will go to $13.50 and more rural areas will end

Some believe this will help out the working class, while others feel this will hurt small businesses and decrease job opportunities. Here are some opinions of Lane students on the increase.

Stephanie Nichols

"The minimum wage currently is lower than it should be. I think minimum wage is directed towards the working class. You know, people who aren't educated typically or are in the process of being educated. I think it [increased minimum wage] would be much more helpful as far as supporting their education if they would like to do that. The prices of things are increasing as well, so I think it's just part of keeping up with the times."

Destiny Stringer

"We're letting the companies' greed get in the way of something that is right. I feel like that's the issue that should be addressed. It shouldn't be whether we increase it [minimum wage] or not, but what we should be doing to make that work and why it wouldn't work. What's stopping that from working? It's greed."

Devin Plain

"What worries me the most is if they [businesses] increase minimum wage, then I have a bad feeling that a lot of people won't get nearly as many hours for work as they're used to. Because they'll probably still find a way to balance it out. If the government makes them raise minimum wage up to 13-something, then they're going to stop offering more than 30 hours a week so that they don't have to pay more."

Titan guard Shelby Snook floats across the court with determination in her eyes, as Everett Trojans forward Makaliah Johnson rushes to stop her in Saturday's first-round playoff game. Snook, a 5' 9" sophomore had 25 points, six rebounds and two assists on the night. The Titans scored the first basket and never looked back – defeating the Trojans by 50 points to end with a win of 89-39.

Shelby Snook: Bouncing back

By Kylee O'Connor Reporter

Shelby Snook, a redshirt sophomore guard from Roseburg, Oregon, had to deal with a significant injury during her time on the Lane women's basketball team. She has since recovered, rallied and became one of the top players in Lane basketball history.

A week before her sophomore year, Snook tore her ACL, forcing her to redshirt the 2014-15 season.

After leading the team in scoring during Lane's 2013-14 NWAC final four-appearance season, it was a new and difficult experience for Snook to be sidelined.

"It was tough, especially the first 5-7 games that I had to watch," Snook said. "Sitting on the bench and knowing what you could do to impact the game was really difficult and just understanding that I had to try and help the team in whatever way I could."

Anterior cruciate ligament injuries are some of the most common knee injuries, according to The American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons. The injury severity ranges from grade 1 sprains, where the ligament is mildly damaged, to grade 3 sprains, where the ligament is completely torn.

Recovery can take up to nine months, according to Dr. Benjamin Wedro.

Because of Snook's injury, Greg Sheley, head women's basketball coach, feels fortunate to have spent three years with Snook, compared to the average two that a community college normally allows.

"By having her be with us for a third year Sara Kesling has enjoyed playing with Sno because of injury, you get to know people a little getting to know her on and off the court.

bit more," Sheley said. "Those two years are such a turnover, but she's an outstanding person, very selfless and caring of her teammates, so it's been fun to get to know her."

Snook herself has found the silver lining. The extra year has given her the opportunity to learn and execute the game at a higher level.

"I got to understand more what the coaches wanted out of me, so I think this last year I've done a better job as a point guard," Snook said.

It is clear that Snook's impact has been a huge factor in leading the Titans to a 29-1 record thus far. Snook leads the Northwest Athletic Conference with 252 total assists, overtaking the next ranked athlete by over 60 assists. Moreover she is tenth in scoring, twelfth in free-throw percentage and fifteenth in 3-point field goals.

Snook's teammates rely on her leadership and ability to show by example. Sophomore guard Sara Kesling has enjoyed playing with Snook and getting to know her on and off the court.

"She's very humble," Kesling said. "She's very encouraging. I have a lot of confidence in her and I know she can hold our team up in times of need."

Snook has overcome a lot, but hopes to be that determining factor during the rest of the NWAC Women's Basketball Championship Tournament. Starting out strong against Everett, Snook tallied 25 points in just-under 25 minutes of playing time in Lane's first-round 89-39 win.
